GENERAL LEE'S OLD SERVANT IS DEAD

Negro Who Stayed With Famous Leader Till Death, Succumbs In Baltimore.

BALTIMORE, Feb. 11 .- Joseph Preston Norris, veteran colored porter in the office of President Daniel Willard, of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, and body servant to Gen. Robert E. Lee while commander in chief of the Confederate army, died vesterday of old age at his home here.

He came to Baltimore shortly after the death of General Lee. His first employment with the railroad was at Camden station, and he was later transferred to the executive office.

A typical old "uncle" so familiar in the South in antebelleum times, Norris was a native of Lexington, Va., and was born in slavery on the plantation of Samuel McDowell Read, a promi-nent member of the Virginia legislature of the early sixties.

Born In Slavery.

"I was born in slavery long before there was any talk of war, and graw up on the plantation until my people were freed. Then I went into the Southern arms." up on the plantation until my people were freed. Then I went into the minutes were ticked off on a wireless in the Raleigh banquet room, and 200 folks and many of my people did.

"After a few months I was the state of the white folks are minutes were ticked off on a wireless in the Raleigh banquet room, and 200 diners, at least for once in their lives. folks and many of my people did.
""After a few months I was trans ferred to General Robert's employ, and acted as his personal servant dur-ing the war, until he started on the Gettysburg campaign, neither in the army nor at home.

Why They Loved Him.

"That's why we people of the South loved him so devotedly and did the raised, in a darkened room, with best we could for him at all times.

"When I went to work for the general I was following my trade as a blacksmith. I worked in the tent of our commander, keeping things tidy for him and looking after his uniforms, his military boots and his trunk, and I also waited on his table while the army was in the field. The while a strong plea for world while the army was in the field. The trunk, and I also waited on his table while the army was in the field. The general didn't like to 'put on style to make a show.' He only carried a couple of suits of uniforms, an extra pair of boots or two and such other articles of dress as he needed to make him comfortable. I kept his riding boots and his clothes looking nice and the buttons of his uniforms ahining while I was with him.

Describes the Meals.

Most times in camp we had early

"Most times in camp we had early breakfast, just after daybreak, so everything would be over with before the day's action began. On the marches we didn't have a chance to get much for the general and his staff officers and they were satisfied with cold linehes and things of that limd. It was the same when we were were well as the same when we were satisfied with cold linehes and things of that limd. It was the same when we were satisfied we were satisfied with cold linehes and things of that limd. It was the same when we were kind. It was the same when we were on the march at sundown, but if the army was bivouacking we used to discuss their plans while they ate, compare the strength of their forces with the Union armies and receive dispatches about the way things were going in other parts of the South where lighting was in progress.
